better things of life. When the new railroad approached Cases Grandes, and the engineers were casting about for a route, if possible, through the mount-ins toward the south, the doctor approached the builders of the road and offered for a good consideration to reveal the loca ion of a way through the mountains toward he south, to San Migue, which would be perfectly suitable for the railroad extension. He declared that the locat on of this route had been revealed to ilm by an Indian, and that while he had sub-equently verified the truthful-ness of the report, the trail was so sit nated that no person not a ready famillar with it could possibly find it. His proposition was not accepted. Dr. Balmer claim d to be thoroughly informed upon the mineral and other resources of the district around ion was undoubtedly correct, and of value, but the old man's habit of talkng for effect often led him into indiretions of speech, and the consequence was to discredit in the eyes of most people much of what he asserted to be

It was always difficult to get the old loctor to confine himself to the subject under discussion. He would wander fren and far from his story, and this made it difficult to his rain any connected information from him. In Casas Grandes Dr. Bulner lived in a room attached to a table.
